A Trilogy of Short Plays
by Julie Greene

Three plays
by Julie Greene

Flying to Santa Barbara

Four strangers are thrown together "like "Lifeboat" without the cannibalism" and band together—perhaps—to reach their common destination.

Approximately 1 hour 6 minutes.

Higher Learning

Professor K is a respected educator in "Higher Learning"—but will he abuse his position of trust?

Approximately 15 minutes

Subway

Tiffany must choose the least dangerous of two tense situations.

Approximately 17 minutes.

A Note from the Playwright...

"There are two ways to view human nature: all are good, and bad people are the exception; or all are bad, and good people are the exception. We sometimes trust people simply because we know them, or because their position implies they can be trusted. Once, a stranger provided what I needed in an emergency--something the people I trusted did not provide. This challenged my assumptions about who we can, and do, trust. Your task? Which view of human nature is true for you, and which is the exception?"
