

Kitchen

Recipes

By Steve A. Rowell

Kitchen Recipes is a full-length dramatic play in two acts told in a non-linear format. The play depicts a family starting out in the 1950s suburbia and follows them for 60 years. It incorporates a narrator who drifts through the play, and the players representing their lives in cooking metaphors.

"I find the play to be sensitive, with interesting characters and relationships. It's also interesting theatrically, with the device of going back and forth in time. The device of the cooking show narration is good—just what we want to do with this theatre company."

"Rowell's Kitchen Recipes dishes up a filling offering with distinct flavors and textures. It depicts the new culture shaped by the suburbs. Rowell's use of culinary metaphors provides a welcome contrast to a stern tale told with intelligence and understanding."

Limelight Theatre, St. Augustine
