

By Patrick M. Brennan

What would you do to prop up the rapidly sinking value of your dot-com stock options? Tripp and Zack are discussing the latest quarterly results, which establish that the company is sinking fast. Some people are going to have to be laid off. Tripp uses that to segue into a confrontation with Zack about the huge volume of child pornography on Zack's computer. Tripp wants Zack to resign from the company, or else he'll have to bring the evidence to the attention of the boss. Zack tries to convince Tripp that he's being framed, that his laptop's been hacked. As it happens, Tripp is framing Zack. When Zack discovers this by accident, he has the upper hand, and he threatens to bring Tripp's duplicity to the attention of the boss, unless Tripp resigns. But neither Tripp nor Zack had the technical ability to frame each other; in both cases, they received Norm's help. Norm is a nerd, and Tripp and Zack are outraged to learn that Norm has been working under the table for both of them. Norm gets called to Tripp's office, and in a comic turnabout, presents the goods on both Tripp and Zack. Norm brings out two resignation letters to Tripp and Zack.
