

Minstrel Boy

By Christine Emmert

It is the night after her son's funeral. Megan is confronted by her daughter-in-law. As they talk, we learn that her son died in prison in a hunger strike. His wife left him some months before after growing tired of his terrorist activities. She talks of her love for him, and their troubled life growing up amidst the fighting between the Irish and the English. Soon it is revealed that, even though in the end James requested food, Megan never spoke out and allowed her son to die. "Causes" are question in this intense drama.
